

GIVING BACK: DR LOW CHAI LING
AESTHETIC PHYSICIAN,
THE SLOANE CLINIC

Ask Dr Low about her work as an aesthetic physician and she more likely to tell you about employing the disabled and the free service she runs for disadvantaged and abused women than the celebrities and high-flyers who seek her out. "There are people who have the misconception that aesthetics are for the vain and superficial; that is not true," she states. "At The Sloane Clinic, while we deal with models and socialites wishing to enhance their already gorgeous looks, we also deal with reconstructive work. For example, our plastic surgeon Dr Tan Ying Chien is heavily involved in Operation Smile that treats cleft lips in children from poverty stricken areas such as remote parts of China and Indonesia."

"I myself run a pro bono clinic where I treat women who have been abused or disfigured by their partners or spouses," continues Dr Low. "For instance, I removed tattoos from a woman who was forcibly held down and disfigured with tattoos by a jealous husband, and I have also removed tattoos from female delinquents who wanted a fresh start in life. I believe everyone deserves a second chance, and our society needs to empower these people to become a better and stronger version of themselves."

Dr Low is certainly a woman of principles. This extends to her everyday course of practice, where she treats all who walk into her clinic equally, whether they be a superstar or an ordinary woman. "My patients all get the same care from me," she says, "Aesthetics is an art form, and every patient is unique, needing different treatments and techniques."
